2010. Hardcover. Book Condition: New. 308 Climate change is high on the international agenda with many predicting that it would be the biggest challenge facing humanity in the 21st century. Nations, both developed and developing, are engaged in intense discussions on how to mitigate the impact of this emerging meta catastrophe. The discussions have been, by and large, at the global macro-level while not as much attention has been on regional-level and ground-level issues. The book looks at both the aspects, the macro-global as well as the micro-local. At the regional level it looks at the South and Southeast Asian regions while at the local level it looks mainly at agriculture and the impact on poor and vulnerable sections. Some suggested measures for adapting to climate change are made since whatever mitigation measures are taken today we have to live with climate change till at least 2050. These include out-of-the-box solutions like organic farming, collective use of water and other scarce resources like pasture land, recording of best local practices in arid and semi-arid areas etc. Extracts from the latest IPCC Report, UNDP Human Development Report that are relevant to the South and Southeast Asian region are also annexed. About The Author:- Krishan Saigal, a gold medallist in engineering and an M.P.A. from Harvard, joined I.A.S. in 1954. After retirement he worked for over a decade, in international organizations on matters relating to the oceans and the environment including climate change and sustainable development. Books by him are Policy Making in India, Vedic Management, Science and System of the Upanishads, God and Goddesses in Hinduism and Sustainable Development: The Spiritual Dimension. Contents:- Contents # Preface.: Acknowledgements.: List of Contributors.: Introduction.: Krishan Saigal.: Impact on South and Southeast Asia.: Nitin Desai.: ASEANs Approach to Climate Change.: P.V. Rao.: Impact on Indian Ocean Region:....
