He was great, says the Liverpool Pulpiteer--very great; but his greatness was all displayed in the political and social arenas; in the arena of religion he was simply farcical. Which is surely a most cheerful theory--for Christians. For the sake of fairness, even at the risk of boring our readers, we reproduce the whole portion of the article which deals with Iconoclast. It is possible now to be grateful for the services which Bradlaugh-materialism rendered to the cause of Christianity. Of course, Bradlaughism, as represented by his popular lectures against the Bible, and against what he was so fond of calling the God of the Bible, is as dead as Pharaoh's Egyptians. The lectures, as lectures, as reasoned statements against religion, were simply beneath contempt. The one puzzle in Bradlaugh's life is how so clever a man could be such a fool as to talk as he did, how so great a mind could bring itself to such puerility, or how, on another and not pleasing hypothesis, so honest a soul could degrade himself by playing it low down to the ignoramus from the taproom for the sake of their pence. With one's whole heart going out to this man in affection and in gratitude and in reverence for his great fight for freedom and humanity, one has taken a friend to hear him, and been disgusted and shamed by the spectacle of the lion of a...
