Skipper Georges Stort. tN the evening of that day, which had been beautiful to the end, Skipper Georges daughter seemed more full of life than ever. In the last hour of daylight she had given her lesson to her little sister, who was no great proficient at learning, and who was, by degrees, (like some other children, with other words, ) getting broken of making c-o-d spell fish. She tripped across the even ground in front of the house, to meet her father, with a lighter step than usual, and was busier than ever within doors. When supper was over, and after the threewicked lamp in the chimney was lighted, she read, out of a book that Miss Dare had lent her, a story of an ancient mariner, and his strange voyage; while the mother knitted a pair of woollen leggings for her husband, and the stout fisher sat upright, with Janie on his knee, sometimes looking at his daughter as she read, and sometimes looking, musingly, into the fire, where the round bake-pot stood, covered with its blazing splits, and tinkled quietly to itself. George Barbury was a large, strong-bodied man, more than six feet in height, with a broad chest, and every way a pattern of a stout, healthy fisherman. His rusty clothes, --jacket, and vest, and trowsers, --patched evenly and cleanly at the knees and elbows, had a manly look; so had his shoes, with their twine-ties, and his strong,...
